UNIVERSITY PRESS

Dear Educator:

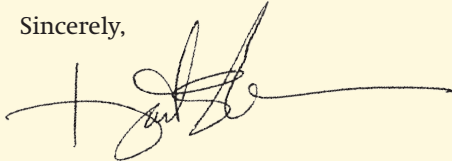

As a department of the University of Oxford, the Press furthers the University's objective of excellence in research, scholarship, and education by publishing worldwide. Our Canadian branch was founded in 1904, and our first Canadian schoolbook—Canadian High School Arithmetic—was published in 1925. More than three million copies of our most famous text, the Canadian Oxford School Atlas, have been printed since the first edition appeared in 1958. You, like me, may well be familiar with the iconic black-and-gold cover from your own days as a student!

Today the world is changing faster than ever and Oxford is changing with it. The Atlas—in its ninth edition—remains a cornerstone of Canadian classrooms, and Oxford texts in the humanities and social studies still set the benchmark for excellence. But exciting new resources such as Shakespeare Online carry the Press's traditional reputation for excellence into new multimedia dimensions. The world of the twenty-first century is more interconnected than ever before and so too have new partnerships with other leading educational publishers reinvigorated the Oxford list.

We are proud to represent in Canada the various imprints of Houghton Mifflin Harcourt, one of the largest and most respected American school publishers, as well as Davis Publications—North America's leading publisher of educational resources for art educators and students—and Goodheart-Willcox, a long-established and leading publisher of technical, trades, and vocational texts and resources. Oxford is also the Canadian home of the renowned literacy brand BOLDPRINT; and we're delighted to bring Project X, perhaps the most successful new literacy program of the past decade in the UK, to the Canadian classroom.

Oxford offers a wide range of print and online resources tailored to the needs of today's teachers and students. It is our privilege to support you as an educator in the very important work that you do.

Sincerely,

David Stover
President

Special Features

Profiles in Power

Each of the chapters in The Canadian Challenge is anchored by a profile of the Prime Minister in power during the period. It allows students to see events in context and encourages them to explore how each Prime Minister influenced Canada and the world during his or her time in power.

Thinking Like a Historian

The Canadian Challenge teaches students historical thinking. The “Thinking Like a Historian” section at the end of each chapter helps students to find, select, and interpret different sources of information, identify continuity and change, analyze the causes and consequences of events, use secondary sources as evidence, and ask historical questions.

Up-to-Date Information

The final chapters of The Canadian Challenge deliver in-depth analyses of the challenges Canada faces in the 21st century, including the complexities of the evolving political landscape. In the final chapter, students are asked to analyze future challenges and reflect on the role they may play in dealing with them.

Discovering the Physical World ©1999

Grade 7

Authors: Christine Hannell and Stewart Dunlop

Students explore the five themes of geography, the different patterns in the physical world, and the world's natural resources. They also learn to interpret and use a wide range of data, and produce maps, graphs, and diagrams. In doing so, students apply skills in research and communication, and use of maps and globes.

Discovering the Human World ©2000

Grade 8

Authors: Christine Hannell and Stewart Dunlop

Students gain insight into population distribution around the world, trade relationships between different global economies (with emphasis on Canada), and factors that affect migration. Activities throughout require students to use a wide range of geographic tools, such as topographic maps, land-use maps, scattergrams, and population pyramids.
